"M. QUAD" ON NOVEL READING.

Talk with a Boy on Current Juvenile Lit erature-Books Worth Reading. [Detroit Free Press.] Does it hurt a bey to read novels?" Take a clean sponge and dip it into a running gutter, and what is the result? The sponge can be cleaned and purified again, but only after much labor.

The human mind, my lad, is a sponge and it soaks up the good, bad and in different with the same relish. The great trouble with novels is the false ideas and vicious theories. It is the same with all serial stories in the socalled boys' papers, and it is so to a certain extent in many of the boy books. In the first place the boy, no matter what his age, is always made to perform feats of valor which common sense teaches you is impossible. He never acts nor talks like a boy. His adventures as a hunter, detective or runaway are too improbable.

Nevertheless, as you read you find vourself half believing, at least, and next thing is to wonder why you can't be a hero. The story makes dissatisfied with school and home and family government, and the first is to run away or plan some adventure. Even if you say to yourself that you won't believe a word of the story, the mind will still soak up many of the false theories and absurd ideas, and later on in years it may cost you something to get rid of them.

Let me ask you how much better off you would be to sit down in a grocery for three hours each evening and listen to some man telling lies knowing all the time they were lies! Would that improve your mind? Many of the novels are no more improving than such grocery tales.

intelligent, well-posted man? School education, to begin with. If we learned nothing after we left school, the world would slip backwards. His mind goes on day after day, week after week. picking up scraps of history, politics, travel, botany, astronomy, and so forth. and by and by he is a human encyclopedia. He may read love stories and dventures all his days and be no better off. Indeed, he will be far worse off. Well, what shall a boy read?"

There are one or two boy papers of rood moral tone. The heroes are not exaggerated, and the adventures are not improbable. If the story is of mining. the author gives some valuable information in regard to minerals and how to If it is of hunting, you are taught how to make snares and traps, and are given the principles of taxidermy. If it is of boating, you are taught the principles of sailing and rowing. If it is of the sea, you are given the correct names of ropes and yards and sails, and the habits and traits of the people of other countries are correctly stated.

There are a few boy books which are true to every-day life. Read these, and if you have further time take history, or something else which is certain to return some benefit-a daily paperwith its news from every foreign - coun try its home happenings its discussions of all matters of interest its incidents and accidents, is geography, history, grammar and orthography com-

It is loubtful if this money ever has been worse than the greenback in the dark days of the American civil war. The finance department seems to have had a consistent plan in mind. Gradually the debt has decreased until it now reaches about 90,000,000, while the specie reserves have increased from next to nothing until now they foot up 60. 600,000. Trade being against Japan has prevented the rapid accumulation of specie reserve, and the internal improvements have also drawn on the treasury in excess of receipts from cor-

Philadelphia Record. Perhaps the dyspeptic, or the victim of the gout or a disordered liver, may be pardoned a temporary ebullition of irritability, but it will not do to ascribe the blame attaching to a melancholy demeanor to innate temperament. Some of the greatest physical sufferers have been noted for their cheerfulness and never-failing good humor, while it is no extraordinary thing to see those who have health and every comfort shrouded in an air of dejection and moodiness. Most frequently this is the result of habit, and of one that may quickly become morbid. Indeed, we believe there are very few persons of ordinary intellectual faculties who are not capable of schooling themselves to a blithe demeanor of cultivating the spirit and the fortitude to comport themselves Lecrily among their fellow-men.

Ancient Spinning and Weaving.

[London Queen.] Spinning and weaving in ancient times were principally performed by women: indeed, the words woof, weaving and web are allied to the word wife.
